DEATH OF BRITAIN'S MONARCH

Whole Empire Thrown into Mourning Over Sudden Death Of King Edward VII---King George V On The Throne

LONDON, May 6.—King Edward VII died at 11.45 o'clock to-night in Buckingham Palace of bronchial pneumonia which developed from a cold contracted a few days ago. Prince George of Wales immediately upon his father's death became King. The initial act of the new ruler was to telegraph to the Lord Mayor of London the announcement of the King's death. The telegram was: "To the Lord Mayor, Mansion House, 'I am deeply grieved to inform you that my beloved father the King passed peacefully away at 11.45 tonight.' Signed, 'George.'"

THE DREADED NEWS.

Then came the official bulletin issued by the king in his last moments. In an instant the news that all England dreaded and which they had looked for all day was flashed throughout the country. Although the eminent physicians who attended His Majesty in his last moments have made no official announcement as to the cause of his death, it is believed that bronchial pneumonia was the cause of death. There is no doubt that Edward was worried greatly over the political trouble which confronted him and that aggravated the illness from which the King had been suffering for more than a year.

A SHORT ILLNESS

It was only three days ago that his condition became serious. King Edward returned to London Wednesday after a stay of seven weeks at Biarritz and it was at once evident to all his intimates that his visit there to regain health had been futile. Several alarming reports were sent out from Biarritz during the King's stay there but official denial was given them and the nation was kept in ignorance of his real condition until the return of Queen Alexandra from her Mediterranean cruise. His failure to meet her at the railway station as had been his custom for years gave the first inkling of his real condition. Then it was learned that he was seriously ill in Buckingham Palace and that specialists had been called in to attend him.

ALARMING NEWS

The first bulletin issued this morning was of a cheerful nature, but those that followed soon after gradually became alarming until at 3.15 it was announced that His Majesty was experiencing choking spells which affected the heart and that his symptoms were of the gravest character from that time on. The great crowds that surrounded the palace awaited what they knew to be certain. The announcement of the end, which came through the newspapers shortly after midnight, was quietly received and as quietly discussed by the few late theatre goers and the waiting group in front of the palace which soon dispersed and went home.

The body of the dead ruler lies in a chamber in the northwest wing of the palace. The departure of the Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the royal family soon after midnight was the first indication to the crowds outside the palace that the King had passed away. Shortly before Lord Knolly's, His Majesty's secretary, announced to the waiting newspaper men that the King was dying, the Queen and Princess Victoria remained in the palace. Her Majesty with the other members of the royal family and four physicians had been at the King's side throughout the day. Between nine and ten o'clock His Majesty rallied slightly and seemed to recognize his family. Then he lapsed into unconsciousness which ended in his death. Several times the doctors had discussed the advisability of an operation, but it was finally decided unwise, in view of his weakened condition.

THE WHOLE WORLD SYMPATHIZES

The King's death finds the nation and the Empire wholly unprepared. Cables which are already pouring in from all places where flies the Union Jack indicate the way in which the sudden loss of Britain's popular monarch will strike home to the hearts of his world-wide subjects. In Johannesburg the news of the King's illness was received with something like consternation. General Botha immediately expressed deep regret on behalf of his people and made arrangements to receive all news the moment it reached South Africa.

The crown is extremely popular with the Dutch, who always appreciated King Edward's kindness, sympathy and fair-mindedness. Naturally, say the cables, though somewhat needlessly, Britishers there were even more concerned.

From New Zealand gravest anxiety was expressed when news of his illness was received and alas too late for special intercession services were ordered for Saturday when the country's heartfelt prayers were to have been offered for his majesty.

Australians sang the national anthem with fervor Friday while messages from India and Straits Settlements indicated that colored subjects as well as white subjects were anxious.

In Anglo-Canadian circles in London there is expression of deep personal loss. The sorrow of every citizen of the empire will be intense and intimate, for Edward held a place in the hearts of the people, such as given to few rulers of men, and every year which passed since his ascension only deepened and strengthened those feelings of personal loyalty and esteem.

Vossische Zeitung of Berlin, admits that the hatred of Germany was far from royal mind, and it is therefore natural that human sympathy for the nobly minded King is in no respect misdirected in Germany by political considerations.

Russia, United States and other countries pay their tributes of respectful regard and his brother sovereigns all tender their affectionate sorrow for the greatest of them all.

"My heart is too full for me to address you today in more than a few words. It is my sorrowful duty to announce to you the death of my dearly beloved father, the King. In this irreparable loss, which has so suddenly fallen upon me and the whole empire, I am comforted by the feeling that I have the sympathy of my future subjects, who will mourn with me for the beloved King. I have lost, not only a father's love, but the affectionate and intimate relations of a dear friend and adviser.

"No less confident am I in the universal and loving sympathy which is assured to my dearest mother in her overwhelming grief. Standing here little more than nine years ago, our beloved King declared that so long as there was a breath in his body he would work for the good and amelioration of his subjects. I am sure that the opinion of the whole nation will be that this declaration has been fully carried out.

"To endeavor to follow in his footsteps and at the same time to uphold the constitutional government of these realms will be the earnest object of my life. I am deeply sensible to the heavy responsibilities which have fallen upon me.

"I know that I can rely upon the parliament and on the people of these islands and my dominions beyond the sea for their help in the discharge of arduous duties and their prayers that God will grant me strength and guidance.

"I am encouraged by the knowledge that I have in my dear wife one who will be a constant helpmate in every endeavor for our people's good."

An Empire Mourns

King Edward is dead, and the world is in mourning.

Great Britain and Ireland have lost a good king, the British Empire a model Emperor, and the world its greatest diplomat and a citizen of whom it can be said that he fulfilled his duty.

As a ruler and a man, he was esteemed and beloved of all the world over.

In him the people of Great Britain had a King who was above all things a man of the people, whose delight it was to mingle freely with them. He was an ideal as a constitutional monarch, and in his relations with foreign nations a safe and judicious leader. He was loved for his many good works and his kindly interest in all that affected the welfare of all classes of the people.

To the citizens of the Dominion beyond the seas he was Imperial in every sense of the word. He never considered the affairs of the nation without keeping in mind the best interests of the colonies, and his influence has done much to cement the Imperial bonds.

There was no man of any nation who was more highly respected by the nations of the world. He was recognized by all as easily the greatest diplomat in international affairs. His whole influence was for peace, and there was no nation but what heeded his advice. Many times he has, by his personal influence, preserved the peace of Europe, and for that reason, if for no other, the world will mourn his death and respect his memory.

Canadians, whether native born or naturalized, have always held King Edward in affectionate regard. As a young man he visited Canada, and by his manly bearing endeared himself to the country, and since that time, especially since his accession to the throne, it has been felt that he had a special interest in this unit of the Empire. There is sincere and deep mourning throughout Canada because of the passing of a great Imperial statesman.

A great man and a great ruler has passed from the scene of action. He did his duty in his most responsible position. The heartfelt sympathy of hundreds of millions of loyal British subjects goes out to Queen Alexandra and the Royal Family. The world sympathizes with the British Empire in their great loss.

A long life well spent, a heavy responsibility well fulfilled, and a great duty well done is the record of the late King, a record that will have a large place in history and a permanent hold on the affections of his people. Lethbridge Herald.

Realizing What's What

The United States are waking up to the fact that Canada is fully competent to conserve her natural resources for the use of her own people. Time was when popular opinion in the United States tended to regard J. C. Canby as a hewer of wood and a drawer of water for Uncle Sam. But certainly expressions of opinion of a contrary sort that are now continually cropping up in the American press show that this attitude towards Canada is fast giving way. Here is a sample from the editorial of the American Forestry Journal:

"Canada is measuring her timber resources and preparing to protect them by progressive and drastic measures against exploitation for the benefit of wasteful foreign countries, including her next-door neighbor. We cannot look to the north for our salvation. We must husband all our remaining resources and plant trees wherever they can be grown more profitably than they can in order that our own future may be assured. This is the only way. Canada has not the resources for her own needs and ours too, and she is sufficiently wide awake and intelligent to guard her own. The only way that our timber resources and Canada's can be made inexhaustible is by the application of the highest scientific knowledge and the broadest common sense."

License Commiss'rs Meet

The Provincial License Commissioners met at Frank on Wednesday afternoon for the purpose of considering the granting of hotel and wholesale licenses in the different towns of the Crown's Northwest. The following is a list of those present upon:

The Grand Union Hotel at Coleman was granted a license, subject to production of title of property.

Report Of The Swine

Commission

The report of the Commission sent last year by the Dominion Government to Europe to study the swine raising industry has been issued. It consists of a pamphlet of sixty pages of printed matter and a large number of striking illustrations.

The countries visited were England, Scotland, Ireland, Denmark and Holland. Denmark and Ireland being the strongest competitors of Canada in the British market, received most attention. The report described clearly how the hogs are bred and raised, and the various steps taken to develop the export trade. The fact of the operation of the swine industry as applied by the Danes to the breeding and raising of the swine, the packing and marketing is fully described. Co-operative feeding, which involves the purchase of over six hundred million pounds of grain, oil, cake, etc., a year, is fully dealt with.

A valuable feature of the report is the attention given to the new hogs followed in the different countries for maintaining harmony between packers and farmers, and the marketing of a uniform supply of pigs. Co-operation, not only between farmers, but between packers and farmers, is described with excellent results. It is especially true in England in bacon curing facilities.

After dealing with the various laws of production in different countries, a chapter is devoted to the English bacon trade and another to lessons for Canadian farmers and packers. The report is comprehensive and practical, and therefore of value to every swine raiser in Canada. Copies may be procured free by writing the "Live Stock Commissioner" at Ottawa.

Look out for the Comet on Wednesday next. You may never have the chance again to witness this traveler.

Special Offer

In order to further increase our circulation, we have made arrangements with the Family Herald and Weekly Star, whereby that paper together with the Blaimore Enterprise will be forwarded to new subscribers for the balance of 1910 for the small sum of $1.50. As the Family Herald is known to be the best family periodical in Canada, and as large numbers of people from Quebec and Ontario provinces are today located throughout the province of Alberta, this clubbing offer affords a splendid opportunity to secure both papers. Address $1.50 with your name and address to The Enterprise, and we will forward both papers as above stated.

"AIR 'LL BE FULL OF US"

INVENTOR HOLLAND PREDICTS THAT SOON EVERY ONE WILL FLY.

Envisioned the Famous Submarine Boat Which Bears F. J. Name—At the Initial Stages of That Invention Everyone Was Skeptical, But the Boat Is Now on the Water, Success—Description of His New Flying Machine.

If Inventor John P. Holland has his way about it, men and women of flesh and blood will not have to wait until they have assumed their aerial bodies before putting on wings. Mr. Holland proposes that they shall soon be able to buy wings—wings guaranteed to fly—at the comparatively low price of $10 per pair. He is sanguine about the success of the invention but is now working upon "Fly!" he recently exclaimed—when questioned about his plans for saving the air. "Why, in a few years the air 'll be full of us."

Mr. Holland expects to be able to construct to fly not merely to sail in the air by means of a balloon. He contemplates fitting the public out with wings so that each individual can go from point to point, through the air with as little difficulty as is now experienced in riding a bicycle and in time with perhaps even less danger than bicycle riding now involves.

The inventor has succeeded hitherto in doing things about which people were skeptical. He was put in the class with Jules Verne's Captain Nemo when he began experimenting with submarine boats, but the boat that navigates the ocean beneath the waves is now an undoubted success. Consequently, when he says he expects soon to be able to flap a pair of wings and second into the air, the flying machine devised by Mr. Holland consists of four wings, each ten to fifteen feet long. They are to be strapped to the body and fastened at the shoulders and two at or near the hips. This arrangement, it will be noted, is different from that supposed to be in vogue among the angels, but of course the science of flying is new among mortals, and improvement may be introduced as time goes on. By Mr. Holland's plan both hands and feet will be used in working the wings. The mechanism upon which the inventor is now experimenting in a shop in Jersey City is composed of aluminum, steel, wire and leather and only weighs about twenty-two pounds, exclusive of the wings. It has not been decided of what to make them. "But," says some one, "what if the wings should break or the mechanism should fail to work while the wearer is a few hundred feet up in the air?" Mr. Holland intends to provide against accident by building the wings in such a manner that the person flying, can come to the ground slowly and safely if anything goes wrong with the apparatus.

Once the possibility of flying has been proved it will be easy to provide particular kinds of wings for different kinds of people. The butterfly of fashion will naturally want a different style of wings from the workman who flies from his suburban cottage to the factory in the city each morning, carrying his dinner pail. Fashion in wings will in time adapt themselves to the requirements of the case. In a similar way persons who learn to fly will soon discover how to avoid entangling themselves in trolley wires and how not to alight in the street in front of an automobile or on top of a baby carriage. Similar difficulties were mastered when people began to ride bicycles. Mr. Holland advises selecting the top of a skyscraper or an open space in a park for alighting, as it will be necessary to descend at an angle rather than straight down.

The Lethbridge S. O. E. football team are planning to journey to Cowley on Victoria Day, where they propose playing the Cowley club in an endeavor to raise the Cowley cup.

Value of Perspiration

The value of perspiration is not understood by everybody, or all would want a certain amount to take on acids and impurities that might otherwise remain in the blood to be worked off more slowly in other ways. At a season when the pores do not act in this way of their own accord, weather conditions being against them, clothing and exercise are effective, and a bath afterwards stimulating as well as refreshing.

CONSTIPATION

Is an enemy within the camp. It will undermine the strongest constitution and ruin the most vigorous health. It leads to indigestion, biliousness, impure blood, bad complexion, sick headaches, and is one of the most frequent causes of appendicitis. To neglect it is slow suicide. TRIFLES ABOUT TRAINS.

Signs and Signals That Should Interest Canadian Travelers.

There are many signs and signals on the British railway that are not to be found on the American ones. The man who reads and remembers the simple facts given below can make himself a more knowing considerably more than most people.

One point that puzzles many people is the fact that engine-drivers pass some danger signals and stop at others.

Well, the ones he passes are "distant" signals. Those he stops for are "home" signals. When the driver sees the "distant" signal against him he goes right on. He knows it only means "Be careful—the home signal may be against you."

When the "home" signal is against him, it means "Stop, and quickly." The "distant" signal is only a caution signal. Its arm has a "swallow-tail" and a "home" signal is a "stop" signal, on the other hand, has an arm with a square end.

Sometimes it is necessary to have a signal on a particularly high point. When this happens, the signal will be of the second signal on the same post, only a few feet nearer the ground.

One signal is called the log signal. A foggy weather it can often be made out when the higher one cannot. On its arm is the letter "L" on its arm is intended solely for the use of engines and trains engaged in shunting. Signals with the letter "L" on its arm, is at many busy stations, while the last-line traffic uses the ordinary signals.

On some lines signals are to be seen with two round holes in the arm. These are used to control the movements of "backing" trains, or trains that are backing up the line.

Perhaps you have wondered how a porter, by glancing at an approaching train, can tell whether it will stop or not, and where it is going? Well, he knows that engine code. It is a very simple one. He tells by the lamps it carries both by night and by day.

If you look at an approaching engine and you see two lamps on the platform, the boiler rest above each buffer—the train is a passenger express. If there is one above the right hand buffer and one on top of the boiler, at the foot of the smokestack, it is a goods express. If it is a train of empty passenger coaches there will be three lights—one above each buffer, and one at the smokestack. A slow local train has only one light, and that at the smokestack. An engine running alone has also only one light. In this case it is over the left-hand buffer.

If you remember these simple points, you should not be at all at a loss in telling whether a train coming in the distance is yours or not. The position, by the way, of the two wooden arms sometimes to be seen at the foot of the smokestack indicates the direction of the train.

Besides the lamps on the engine, there are the lamps at the other end of the train. The engine has a red light to carry a red light. If there are two red lamps, side by side, it gives a warning of a special train passing immediately behind. In the case of the train, the engine has a red light to carry a red light. The reason of the tail-light system is to let the signalman, as the train passes, know whether the train is complete or not. There must be no stop carriage left on the line for the next train to smash itself against. Hence the red light.

Breaking It Gently.

The somewhat careless major of an English regiment stationed in India returned to London after an absence of several years. His sluggish liver needed touching up, he thought, and so he took to his famous advice and paid his advance charge.

"Major," said the doctor, "you are in perfect health, but I think you can pull you through. You must purchase a tub four feet wide and two deep. Then you must sit in it with tepid water."

"No," replied the doctor. "You must stand in it and with a sponge moisten your body. Having done this, you must apply some saucy-saucy matter."

"Will plain yellow soap do?" asked the patient.

"Yes," said the doctor. "Having thoroughly soaped yourself, you must dry off with a rough towel."

"Why, doctor, this is awfully like a bath exclaimed the veteran," replied the famous physician, "but I feel, sir, that you need it."

Monument to Good Women.

In the Lady Chapel of the new Liverpool Cathedral there will be magnificent stained glass windows in commemoration of the lives of good women. Famous women of the Middle Ages and New Testament are to be included, but there will also be memorials of good women of modern times—Mary Collet, Grace Darling, Josephine Butler, Elizabeth Fry, Ann Hume, Mrs. Somerville, Mary Rogers, the stewardess of the Stella, Queen Victoria, Susanah Sedgley, and others.

Boy Scouts on March.

The Australian Boy Scouts are something more than the average fire-side soldiers. Recently a party of the Brisbane corps arrived in Timor after having walked all the way, nearly 300 miles, in eleven days, some rough country being covered the journey. During the trip the party wore out two pairs of boots each. The boys range in age from 14 to 18 years.

Anthracite Coal.

While anthracite coal was discovered in Pennsylvania in 1770, its record in actual trade dates from 1834. As late as 1835 it was difficult to place the new coal as better than the soft coal. For years it was a drug on the market.

TRAINING FOR THE RACE.

Curious Changes in Preparing Outdoors.

Cambridge Boat Crews.

More than eighty years ago—namely, in 1829—the University of Cambridge, at the University of Oxford to row a match at or near London, each in an eight-oared boat, during the summer vacation.

The difference between that race and the inter-university race of 1910 is almost incredible. In the first place, the boats used were entirely different from modern racing craft. They were called cutters and were about 15 feet shorter than the boats used today. They were about as wide again, very stiff, and of course, unprovided with either outriggers or sliding seats. On the other hand, they were built with keels running the whole length from bow to stern.

Instead of "shorts," the combatants wore blue trousers, Oxford blue and blue-and-white striped jerseys and blue straw hats with a broad blue ribbon. The Cambridge crew was pink instead of the now familiar pale blue. It was not until 1839 that the crew was definitely adopted in the shades of blue which have given us the familiar phrase, the "Battle of the Blue."

In 1839 the Cambridge men wore "shorts" for the first time. The crews still wore cutters. Oxford blue was known as the Isis, was 52 feet long, as against the 62 feet of the modern sixteens. In 1840 the Oxford crew sent its first challenge to Cambridge for a race from Westminster to Putney. But the oldest stipulation was made in this letter of challenge. Oxford desired that none but undergraduates should row. Cambridge would have none of this, and, eventually, Oxford waived their demand. The race was arranged, and rowed. It was won by Cambridge by the narrow margin of three-quarters of a length.

In those early days there was little or no policing of river traffic during the race, and excursion steamers beamed in the most scandalous fashion. In 1845, for the first time, the course chosen was Putney Bridge to Mortlake Church. It was a very old-day, and the race had hardly started before a steamer, rushing past the Cambridge boat, rolled her so badly that No. 7's oar was unshipped, and Oxford went ahead. But Cambridge steadied in wonderful fashion, and actually drew clear in a little more than half a mile. Their success was so overjoyed that he hurled his hat into the water. Cambridge eventually won by a boat half a minute.

During this same race the Oxford Boats Club, carrying the crew's boats, was wrecked, and the crew was rescued by a steamer of Hambleton.

In 1846 the race was moved to a new course, and Cambridge, half full of water, the first boat to start. No fewer than four steamers came rushing past her in rapid succession, and the crew was rescued by a steamer. If the umpire had not been able to throw life-buoys to the crew, some of them would certainly have been drowned.

New Guinea's People.

The natives of New Guinea are an entertaining sort of people. According to the London Colonial Society, they are Mr. A. H. Dunning gave an amusing account of his adventures among the untamed British subjects, mostly his stories relating to a bottle of strong smelling salts, which he carried with him. Under the impression that it was a "white man's life," he was so startled that he took the bottle to try. Then they formed the salts into a sort of trust, and scoured the neighborhood for revenge. Nobody got the salts away. They brought new people up one after the other, propped them up against a tree, and then the Christ Minarels, to wait for the result. Kissing or fondling added Mr. Dunning, was unknown in New Guinea until the visit of the missionaries. These were seen kissing the children, and the custom had been introduced. He only natives, he preferred the old style of salutation.

"Anti-Snch."

Sir George Reid, the first High Commissioner of the Australian Commonwealth, who has been paying a visit to England, and who was nicknamed "Anti-Snch" by the Sydney Bulletin because of his uncompromising attitude towards Socialism, was seen at a luncheon at the Sydney Club. He was taken to Australia by his parents when quite a child, and ultimately became a barrister, building up one of the most lucrative practices in the Commonwealth. The heckler was suspended for a moment, and Sir George, "If you were my band I'd give you poison!" shouted. "You're a doctor, aren't you?" asked "Madam," replied Sir George, "I'd give you poison if I were your husband I'd take it."

Lost Life Bunkers.

A pitiful tale was told at a Sydney Australia, worker named Heaver, who fell into the coal bunkers of a steamship while on duty. The crew was the gang hand groans and muffled cries for help coming from the darkness of the bunkers below. The crew were mustered, and it was then discovered that Heaver was missing. Work was suspended, and a strop was made to pull out the coal at the spot where the moans came from. When the body was recovered, death had taken place some time previously.

Expedition Against Lascars.

An expedition from the cruiser Hyacinthe and the troopship Hardinge landed at Jeddah on the Persian coast recently, under the command of Col. Delacour, marched for seven and a half days and attacked an armed band of Lascars at a village on the Jeddah river. The position was taken, and 700 of the band were killed, between pure and gentle amonitions are absolutely indispensable.

COUGHS & COLDS

LEAD TO CONSUMPTION

Cold is the most dangerous of all diseases. A neglected cold leads to a Croup, Croup leads to a Cough, a Cough leads to a Bronchitis, a Bronchitis leads to a Pneumonia, a Pneumonia leads to a Consumption. It is a slow but sure way to the grave. It is a disease that attacks the lungs, the liver, and tears up the system. It makes for a weak and feeble body. Lately we have received many complaints from different stations along the line to the non-receipt of The Enterpriser, and as most of these complaints come from one particular station east of here it would appear as though these papers were held over and destroyed in that office rather than trouble with their delivery. We take every care in wrapping and addressing our mail and we believe they are sent out from the post office here in right good shape, and there can be no other reason than that mentioned above why they should not reach their respective destinations.

The Toronto Y.M.C.A. has succeeded in raising $686,800.00, being $5,000 more than was originally aimed at.

As the result of a recent earthquake in San Jose, over two thousand people are dead, and the amount of injuries and property damages is incalculable.

A shocking accident occurred at the Medicine Hat C.P.R. yards on Monday afternoon, when a man named Jardine, while attempting to couple two freight cars, was struck in the head between the two cars and killed instantly. The accident occurred in plain view of hundreds of people returning from a ball game.
